Editors say goodbye for forever

By Patrick Seroogy
@lovelandroar | Editor-in-Chief

Well, here we are, after four years. For me, it's been three years of newspaper: two in a leadership role and one, since the beginning of this year, as its editor-in-chief. There have been ups, and there have been downs - both in my stations as a student and a journalist - but I am nothing less than grateful to have experienced all of it.

As a journalist, it is my responsibility to refrain from reporting my subjective opinion in favor of reporting facts. Although I have certainly shared perspectives in my time as a staff writer (to which those who have read my editorials can attest), now is an occasion where I can do the unthinkable. Here, I can discuss my thoughts, actively reflecting on my personal experience and offer counsel someone might find helpful! Extraordinary.

Tradition decrees that I share some advice for underclassmen and tell a story or two about my high school life. However, tradition shifts and evolves over time; such is the nature of progress. I will honor it by putting my own spin on it, the way that I want to do it.

I wish to begin, first and foremost, by giving my thanks: to my teachers and to my peers, something very overdue and even more important.

I would like to thank Mrs. Overbeeke for her time as The Roar's advisor in the time that I knew her as such. She was the one who gave me a chance to be on the staff as a sophomore when it was still a junior- and senior-only class; she was the one who gave me the opportunity to become the editor-in-chief of the newspaper after my second - and, traditionally, what should have been my last - year of Journalism. She stepped down from her advisor position at the end of my junior year, passing the figurative torch onto the teacher on the other side of the staircase.

By Alyssa James
@alyssaajames | Editor

I have written this article with the intention of not only embarking on my final assignment as editor of The Roar, but to say one final goodbye to LHS as a whole. Four years of constant stressing over assignments, studying, and my entire future has left me little time to reflect on this adventure. Now, the time has come.

My whole life I was told that in high school, everything changes - that high school was the time when you truly discover yourself. I was always watching, waiting for the day when it all changed. Sure, I lost a friend here and there, or realized I didn't like something as much as I thought I did, but I never once had a day when things really seemed to change.

Instead, I had four years. Now, looking back on each individual year, the changes could not be more obvious. I don't think that I will ever know of an exact moment when everything changed (there most likely isn't one), but I do know that every year helped me to reach the place that I am in today - the place in which I know who I am, and where I have been.

While many students say they know where their future will take them and what they will be doing, I have learned that it is impossible to actually know what the future will bring. As I realized this, I became scared of its unpredictability. However, after wasting four years being scared, I have finally come to a new realization: this suspense for the future is beautiful.

There are always some truths to the near future: for example, my truths are that I intend to take the next year off of school to travel and further discover myself. I then intend to follow my heart and learn more about what I really want to do. However, there are endless

That teacher, Mr. Hutzel, is the second person I'd like to thank. I could not have asked for a better adviser and partner in handling and overseeing this transition of The Roar. Where I or the (almost entirely new) staff had shortcomings, Mr. Hutzel was kindly lenient about it. Whenever I needed to take an AP Calculus test outside of normal class time, Mr. Hutzel was always chill about me leaving Journalism and potentially not coming back for half an hour (I cannot stress enough how cool this has been of him; thanks, man, I really appreciate it).

His enthusiasm and receptiveness for his new position are more than I could have asked for in an adviser just now finishing his first year. His support has been vital and he has been hospitably democratic about the operation of the paper, which remains as it has been primarily run - by students.

I may well not have been the editor-in-chief of any newspaper if Mr. Hutzel had not stepped up to the plate and accepted the responsibility of The Roar. I likely would not be as fortuitous as I am in my position, doing what I am doing, without the support of those such as Mrs. Overbeeke and Mr. Hutzel: all the teachers I've had in high school, and all before then. The newspaper would not be as autonomous and meritorious as it is without a gracious principal (thanks are due to Mrs. Johnson!), administration, and faculty - not to mention a talented staff of writers (Anna, both Sams, both Claires, Mihaela, Grisha, Olivia, Caroline, Kayla, Courtney, and Madeline). Really, you guys are great. I know The Roar will be in good hands next year.

For that, for all of this, and everything else, I thank you all. The newspaper would not be as pleasant an experience to create without a receptive audience to read it.

Now, why do I say all of this? Is this article just a longlist of people to thank? No... well, only part of it. My point is to show that which forms my support: that which, in part, forms my foundation, both as a student and my personal and scholarly endeavors. I took advantage of that foundation to build something off of it and pursue my interests in subjects through enjoyable media.

For example, Mr. Warden's AP Government and Politics (GOPO) class fostered in me an interest for the study of politics, political science. The Roar allowed me to explore that curiosity by researching and writing articles about politics and public policy. That engrossment with the subject only expanded as time went on, and it is now my intent to study political science in college.

Do you see what I mean to say? That was a succinct explanation of what I want to do for the rest of my life (at least, the career area I want to focus on) and how I came to that conclusion. You could find something and run with it, or you could cultivate something, slowly and meticulously, until it bears fruit; whatever suits you.

Which raises another point: your time - your achievements, your life, your effort and your enterprise - are what you make of it. Your foundation is what raises you up, where you come from, but your future, in an optimistic interpretation of fate, is in your hands.

There's little I could tell you from a standpoint of experience that you don't already know; we're peers, after all. In this world, there are both good and bad: every rose has its thorns. You will encounter reason and illogic; kindness and cruelty; black and white. Most of the world fits somewhere in between the extremes, like a grey sea in between light and dark. In that sea are the little idiosyncrasies that make life amusing or frustrating.

High school is one of those idiosyncrasies that you look back at and either laugh or groan. Don't get me wrong, I cannot wait to be out of here. Senioritis has hit real hard these past couple months. But, while I'll be glad to leave the American pre-secondary public education system, I'll miss the friends and relationships that made high school tolerable and even enjoyable. I'll be sad to see everyone part ways at the end of this year.

Life is an opportunity, albeit short; if Economics class taught me anything, it's that time is a scarce and valuable resource. To live is to be yourself, but that's often easy - to thrive is to strive to be the best version of yourself that you can be. How you live your life is your choice, but I hope it's a happy one. Make it rewarding, or gratifying. Make it unique. Make it special. Whatever you do, make it you.

Thanks, LHS. It sure has been an experience. I bid all a farewell and a merry post-high school reality. This is Patrick, signing off.

Sincerely,

Patrick

possibilities that go along with both of those "truths," and I couldn't be more excited to find out what they will be. These possibilities will be both good and bad, but I know that they will lead me to where I am meant to be.

Almost every day of my high school career I can guarantee that I heard someone complaining about school and expressing how much they can't wait to get out of this "prison," myself included. However, in reality, I wouldn't trade this experience for the world. Without the classes that seemed impossible, I wouldn't be determined; without the teachers who seemed too harsh, I wouldn't be humbled; without those who believed in me, most importantly, I wouldn't be where I am today.

For any reader who shares the common opinion that high school sucks, I recommend taking a step back and looking at it from the big picture. Waking up at the crack of dawn and pulling all nighters to do homework is far from fun. Drama with friends and obstacles such as injuries, arguments, and bad days often seem like the end of the world.

But, when you really step back, and think about it, some of the best years of your life are racing by rather than focusing on the hard days, focus on everything that makes them worth it: the relationships you will leave here with; the confidence you will gain; the potential that you will someday see in yourself.

Though it seems cliché, I could not write this article to my satisfaction without first thanking those who have made this experience as enlightening and enjoyable as possible. I would like to start by thanking those who made the paper possible; Mr. Hutzel, thank you for taking on the responsibility of two editors, a brand new staff, and the weight of the entire paper as a whole new adventure. Mr. Hutzel, you rock. You taught us while we taught you, and you caught on instantly.

Mrs. Overbeeke, thank you for giving Patrick Seroogy and me this wonderful opportunity, as well as trusting us to oversee The Roar after you resigned. I wouldn't have the experience that I have today if it weren't for you and your dedication to flawless work. I would also like to thank Madame Hudson for giving me an opportunity to realize my potential while believing in me the whole way. Even though this wonderful teacher had nothing to do with my position on The Roar, she has made the most important impact on me out of any teacher I have ever had. Madame, thank you for everything.

As my time as Editor for the newspaper comes to an end, I have recollected on my various experiences during the past two years. I began this class with the intention of discovering where writing, as well as my increasing interest in design, would take me; however, when I entered Mrs. Overbeeke's class on the first day of junior year, it was brought to my attention that this class would be about much more than writing articles and placing them on a page.

Without giving it much thought, I expected the Journalism class to be just like any other class: a teacher would assign work; we complete the work; we take a test; we get new work; and so on. To my surprise, the class was structured like one I had never before experienced. The Roar staff and editors work as a team in order to complete a common goal each month: to create a paper full of captivating stories and important, yet timely, information while adhering to a deadline. Plus a lot of cookie Fridays.

I went from a staff writer who could barely write an article that followed the journalistic style or figure out how to make a page, to an editor who could take charge and teach others how to write the proper articles and showcase their creativity in newspaper pages. I could not be more grateful for the opportunity to be an editor this year, and I hope that the editors whom we have chosen for next school year will have gained their well-deserved confidence from this experience as well as leave their mark on The Roar.

In fact, I could not be more grateful for every single opportunity, obstacle, and experience that this school has presented me with, both big and small.

Goodbye LHS, you will forever have an impact on my life. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Alyssa
James

To Jacob Meece -

It seems like just yesterday we were walking you to your first day of kindergarten. You have grown into such a fine young man and we are so proud of you. Graduation marks the beginning of a new chapter and exciting time in your life and we are so proud that you are our son.

Love, Mom & Dad

Dear Patrick,

We are so proud of you and what you have accomplished over the past 4 years at LHS. You have worked so hard to get where you are. We are amazed that you took on the role and responsibility of sole editor-in-chief of The Roar – you’ve done a fantastic job! Congratulations on your graduation and choice of a great university. And who knows, we would not be surprised to see you as editor-in-chief of The Post or NYT or maybe even Secretary of State in the future!

Love,
Mom & Dad
